so, Matt signed up for and took the driver’s test. “I failed,” he said. The lesson he learned – “People are looking out for you and you need to listen when they say you are not ready.”

“You need to keep your feet on the ground. You can’t fly yet,” said Kelly. That day is coming, however.

Matt recently went off the heaviest of his medications and now walks with only a cane. He has a recumbent trike (a bike with three wheels) that allows him to go bike riding outside together. And he now wants to give back – to help others as he has been helped throughout his recovery. He is doing benefit walks and wants to go back to work. He also would like to open a gym and write a book. He recognizes that all this will take time and that his traumatic brain injury will be a lifelong battle, but is prepared to take it one step at a time. “I’ll always keep pushing forward,” he said.

Sharon has no doubt Matt will accomplish his goals. “At The Moore Center, we absolutely love desire and willpower and Matt possesses both,” said Sharon. “He will make it happen, whatever it is.”

And what “it” is remains to be seen as Matt is always full of surprises, as evidenced by he and Kelly’s engagement. Following his accident, after 20 days of not being able to speak, what were the first words out of his mouth - “Will you marry me, Kelly?” And the rest, as they say, is history.

From Dick Anagnost, Chairman of the Board

As my time on The Moore Center Board of Directors comes to a close, I can say with certainly that having been a part of the organization in this capacity helped create a “good life” for me and opened my eyes to how we can all make a difference in the lives of others.

Each month at the Board meeting, we have a “Consumer Moment.” It is by far these moments that will stand at the forefront of my mind as I go off the Board because they presented an opportunity to put a face to the people The Moore Center works to help each and every day. These clients mention specific programs that have assisted them – such as in-home supports, day services or employment services – but more importantly, they most often mention the warmth and encouragement of staff as what has truly made a difference in their lives. It’s the people.

And it’s the people that I will miss most – the hardworking leadership and employees who dedicate themselves to creating opportunities for a good life. I will think of them when I go to the grocery store and see a Moore Center client happily employed, and when I read about the innovative new programs and services that are sure to come about through the organization. I’m proud of The Moore Center and all that it has accomplished, and look forward to the future and the realization of the organization’s vision of having all people, despite their challenges, fully engaged in their communities and living a good life.

From Paul S. Boynton, President and CEO

Change. It’s a word that evokes emotion - positive and negative, excitement and fear. It’s something we all experience, sometimes on a daily basis, and certainly this year as an agency and as individuals, we have experienced a great deal of change. We at The Moore Center strive to face change as we do everything else, however, with an eye toward how to improve the lives of our clients and everyone in our community.

Whether someone’s life has changed due to a traumatic brain injury, or because they have aged and can no longer live as independently as before, we embrace the opportunity to meet their needs and help them to live a good life by providing high quality, cost-effective services with a personal, caring touch. As the way our overall health care system operates shifts, we innovate and look for new ways to provide even greater support to those who need it most. We foster and encourage creativity in facilitating options. We look at the challenges as opportunities. For us, creating opportunities for the people we support is not just a mission; it’s a way of life.

Change is inevitable. It’s how we face it that determines where it will take us. In the year ahead, join us in embracing life in ways you never imagined possible, and in doing so, make your dreams, and the dreams of others, come true.
