

To Our Moore Center Community,

Times have been a bit intense for us all as we've learned to think fast on our feet, increase what we can do remotely, and take care of our community. We have been multi-tasking and problem-solving and we have actually done an amazing job. We've been fully engaged, tackled problems as they arise, and have taken care of each other along the way.

If you're like me, you may be feeling a myriad of emotions. Some moments bring fear or anxiety; others bring gratitude, hope and determination. And there may be times you are feeling empowered, engaged and decisive, and then suddenly you may feel overwhelmed, distracted and uncertain. Does any of this sound familiar?

If you can identify with any of this, you also probably understand that over the last few days our sense of community has become even more powerful and more beautiful, too. We've learned to lean on each other and take turns being up and being down. We've become an even stronger team, all rowing in one direction. And we're moving forward with speed and grace.

So, it may be true that not everything has gone perfectly or as smooth-sailing as we would have liked, or that every decision has been crystal-clear, but we are making incredible progress. We are collaborating and making plans and we're implementing them, too. We are a true family and we are functioning in new ways that make us all feel confident and proud. I know that's how you make me feel.

So onward we go, but we go together. One step at a time. More twists and turns than we could have ever imagined, but together is how we're going to do it.

With gratitude,

Paul
